A Question for the Naturalists. the Editor of The Evening Star

I have observed on several occasions recently in my walks about the city parks scenes of evident murder by big "bold hornets," done on the persons of locusts. In no case have I observed that the locust was able to defend himself. Usually the hornet had the locust down and was stinging him to death, while his cries were pitiful. In one case the hornet was dragging the locust off bodily. Will the naturalist of THE STAR please inform the ignorant if the hornet is in the habit of doing this sort of bas-OLD SUBSCRIBER.

MR. CLARKE TAKES ISSUE WITH THE REPORT

Mr. S. C. Clarke took issue with Mr. Lehman on the report of the committee for the reason that it was not pertinent with the resolution.

What the resolution was intended to bring out, he said, was the law in the case and the rights of the citizens of East Washington under it.

He referred to the act of Congress appropriat ing the money and that portion of the act which read that the money was to be expended upon "the streets and avenues heretofore and

He was of the opinion that the words "hereto tofore and not herein authorized and not con tracted for" applied to all streets which had heretofore been recommended. The Commis-sioners, however, had ruled differently. Mr. M. W. Wines desired to know what the issor iton could do in the matter.

Mr. Clarke replied that while he was not a lawyer he was sure that if the Commissioners had exceeded their authority and violated any law they were amenable to the law, and one could be found to reach them.

The first local police force was organized September 20, 1804, and it then consisted of four officers, Jacob Crawford, Dement Venable, James B. Heard and Zeph Ward, who were termed constables, and this force remained until September, 1842, when, through the instrumentality of President Tyler, the auxiliar: guard were paid in fees.
Ten years later the first force organized and paid by the city made its appearance and Capt. Goddard was placed in command. The members of the force were paid $500 per annum. This force consisted of fifteen men, and those pres-ent at the first roll call were: First ward, Har-rison Craiga and Joseph Hilton; second ward, W. A. Boss rnd W. H. Barnado; third ward, E. G. Handy and James R. Wallard; fourth ward, A. K. Allen and Wm. Martin; fifth ward, John D. Wise and Johnson Simmons; sixth ward, J. E. Willett and Joseph Adams; seventh ward, Uriah Mitchel and Isaac Stoddart. This organization continued until the fall of 1861, when the Metropolitan police force was organized, and it is this organization that will celebrate next week. Among those who helped form the new organization were some of the auxiliary guard and a number of constables, as well as many new men.
